

SAMUEL NADLER

Samuel Nadler, M.D., is a practicing pulmonary and critical care physician and current Providence Swedish system chief of staff. He grew up in Michigan before studying chemistry and playing rugby at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He completed his MD as part of the Medical Scientist Training Program at the University of Wisconsin, Madison earning a PhD in biochemistry before moving to Seattle for his internship and residency in internal medicine at the University of Washington. After working as a hospitalist at Swedish Medical Center he completed a fellowship in pulmonary and critical care medicine at the University of Washington.

In 2011, he joined the Polyclinic working in the pulmonary clinic and attending in the ICU at Swedish Medical Center. While at Polyclinic he served as the medical director for pulmonary medicine and the pulmonary function lab as well as serving on the Polyclinic finance committee and the board of directors of the Polyclinic Network. He joined Swedish Medical Center in 2021 continuing his work with outpatient pulmonary medicine, inpatient pulmonary consultation and attending in the intensive care unit. While at Swedish he chaired the professional behavioral quality review committee and has been an active participant in the medical quality review committee as well as the ethics committee. He has consistently been named by his peers as a Seattle's Top Doctor.

Throughout his career, Samuel has been invested in learning and education that has been recognized by awards for undergraduate education at MIT and resident education at both the University of Washington and Swedish Medical Center. He had numerous publications of original research, invited reviews as well as two patents. His most recent efforts revolve around chasing after active two teenage sons and baking for friends and family.